Dear Mr Weisberg,

You may be amused by a jingle:—

"Five little bullets marching as to war,
One struck a backbone, & then there were four.

"Four little bullets waiting for a spree.
One struck a Governor, & then there were three.

"Three little bullets, alas there were so few,
A dumdum struck a 'kerbstone', & then there were two".

"Two little bullets designed to break a bone,
Soft nosed split a skull in half, & then there was one"

"One little bullet, doleful on its own,
Hid beneath a blanket, and lay there all alone"

While I suspect that your argument from the photos, showing that the first bullet was fired before Zapruder frame 210, is correct. I much doubt that many people will be able to follow the necessarily argument - But even a nit wit can count up to four, & can see that three intervals of 2.3 sec. (~~but~~ as far as I see for no mystery!) cannot be squeezed into ~~a time~~ Zapruder frames lasting less than six seconds.

I am on holiday at the moment, but will write again when I return home on Christmas eve.

Any comments on the jingle will be welcome

Sincerely yours Chas Cundler
